| ORG A | the therapist or a volunteer depending on the stability of the patient | only elective joint replacement patients if they are going to remain in the gym for treatment. We have stair training with the therapists – otherwise the majority of patients are treated in their rooms | No | Yes – mainly for stair training but we do have groups even on holiday's if there are elective patients | Yes | Issues with clean versus “non” clean patients – having to clean the entire room between patient usage. And truly most of our patients can be treated in their room |
| ORG B | Therapist usually transports patient but we do have an aide that we use at times to assist in transport. Therapist checks with nursing staff to make sure OK to take to gym and to coordinate time. Sometimes we trade off with a discipline, so OT brings down, and then PT comes to treat and returns patient to room. | We bring a variety of patients to our rehab gym when we feel it would be of the utmost benefit to their rehab or emotional state. We have brought patients from the PICU and CVICU on monitors or respiratory support with the nurse and/or RT coming as well. It takes lots of coordination but it has been done. Usually, we bring patients once | No; treatment location in note identifies treatment was completed in gym | Our team uses the gym at any time. If it is appropriate for the patient and the nursing staff agrees, the therapist can bring the patient down to the rehab gym. Our weekend and holiday therapists use the gym all the time. | No | |

| ORG C | currently we do not have a full time tech so our therapist transport patients to the gym | 1. Therapist discretion/ therapy needs. Gym is small so patients typically go for equipment in gym specifically | Currently we also use the gym for some of our multidisciplinary evaluations; those teams sign up for the gym | It is available but typically not used on holidays | No | We are currently in process of building a new gym which will allow us to do more. The answer above are for our small transition gym at this time. |
| ORG D | We are lucky enough to have housed our therapy gym on the same floor as the inpatient rehab unit, so therapy provides all transport to/from the unit. Acute care population also accesses the therapy gym but challenged with the time to travel back and forth to the gym. Most therapy on the acute floor is complete in their room or in the hallways. | | They document where the session took place in their notes, but I don't believe it is in their plan with the frequency of therapy. | Yes | Yes | Coordinating transportation (use of the hospital transport team) and timeliness issues are a primary reason we moved away from using this more often. Plus in some areas, we have a small satellite gym making it unnecessary to transport patients. Acute care therapists would love to have therapy gyms on each floor as the travel time and lack of a public bathroom/changing table is a challenge. |

| ORG E | We only complete transport for our Inpatients. This is done by our Support Staff | For gym use, it is really who would benefit from certain equipment in the gym (treadmills, nustep) or a larger floor mat or mat table. | No | Yes – mainly for stair training but we do have groups even on holiday's if there are elective patients | No |
| ORG F | Either the therapist, a rehab aide, or both transport the patient. Our hospital recently added a tech transport team, but it is currently mostly used for transport to other in hospital procedures such as in radiology. We may soon partner with them to transport our patients as well. | Combination of MD activity orders, therapist assessment, and consultation with bedside RN. We have a form which bedside RN must sign off as well prior to transport | No | Sometimes | No |
| ORG G | therapist or rehab aide; determined by the therapist | therapist discretion, approved by the RN each day of treatment | No | Sometimes | No |
